

Overview

Feel you have the care, compassion and drive to help people?

Personal Support Workers (PSW) are important members of the health care team who assist persons with the tasks of daily living such as home management, personal care, family responsibilities, and social and recreational activities through a holistic approach. As a PSW, you will work with nurses and other health care professionals, assisting them with patient care. The PSW is also a vital part of community health care – and often the person who really makes someone's day when they need a smile the most.

Confederation College's Personal Support Worker one-year certificate program will give you the skills you need to get into the workforce faster. During this program, you'll take courses in supportive care, professional growth, helping relationships and assisting clients across the lifespan.

Learner Testimonial

After overcoming several obstacles in life, I landed in the Personal Support Worker program at Confederation College. I have always wanted to work with the older generation and really love the feeling of helping them with their daily needs. The program brought me a lot of joy and a total feeling of peace and serenity. I gained employment right away after graduation and have my great professors and my hard work to thank. My experience at Confederation College has helped me to move into a new stage of my life and teach my two young children that anything is possible.
